

Icelandic Sagas

Storytelling was so crucial to the Viking cultures that in Iceland what most of the world knows as the Viking Age is actually called the Saga Age, an age where heroes and the stories told about them were indistinguishable from one another. Told and recorded around the turn of the millennium, the stories are remarkable not only by virtue of the fact that they are the first large body of prose composed in a European national language, but also because of their stark realism and unflinching portrayal of a grim, harsh, yet also lush and illuminated period of mankind's history.

Dates: Saturdays: 7/11, 7/18, 7/25

Time: 6:30 p.m. – 8:00 p.m.

Cost: $15 per session ($45)

*Spaces are limited so please register in advance, in person.
There is no charge for first-time participants.*